constant and rapid improvements in construction might be a drawback. This is also likely to attract attention as standardisation has been one of the chief features of the American programme.

"The efficiency of our manufacture," he said, "lies not so much in its bulk production as in the high standard of its workmanship and its flexibility by which it can be turned on to the frequent and inevitable new types which must be manufactured in order to keep up with the progress of aviation.

"It is probably to this flexibility that we owe our present superiority in the performance of our aircraft to those of the enemy. Germany, by natural inclination and by the necessity of providing a much larger number of aircraft than ourselves, has tended to standardisation in a very few definite types of engines and airplanes and consequently has found it much more difficult to improve and keep abreast of the latest developments in serodynamical design than we have.

Mr. McAneny denied that present sec-ond class rates constitute a newspaper and said no need had been subsidy, and said no need had been shown for any increased rate for newsshown for any increased rate for newspapers. He said he spoke not for his own newspaper but for five hundred, large and small; that the publishers want Congressional cooperation in considering the problem, and are ready to recognize any inequalities that may be shown.

Advertising, Mr. McAneny said, already is taxed as part of the newspaper's excess profits; that any attempt of newspapers to pass an advertising postage tax to the advertiser would result in the reduced volume of advertising, seriously affecting both newspapers and advertisers, cutting down sources of revenue and checking the acceleration of more active service than has been permore active service.
